

Recreational Access & Trails
 Access points are shown by the relative availability of parking. There are many pedestrian access points where there is no parking, which limit their use to neighborhood people. Parking areas are concentrated between Central and Bridge, and near other bridges. There are two sets of trails in the bosque, one formal and the other informal. The formal trails are paved and the primary example is the Paseo del Bosque, which runs down the east side of the Rio Grande Valley State Park. There are few ADA accessible trails – only at the Rio Grande Nature Center and Rio Bravo Bridge. Bike trails and lanes connect with the Paseo del Bosque at various access points. Acequias and drains also function as an open space network for walkers and joggers in the irrigated valley areas. Where these typically feed into the riverside drain, there is an access point for pedestrians. The map also portrays the relative density of access points: greater accessibility is in red and lesser accessibility ranges from orange to yellow. Note that areas South of Bridge and between Montano and Paseo del Norte appear to be underserved. On the Westside, there are no public access points from Central all the way north to Montano.
